

YOUNG WIFE DISAPPEARS.

Bad Cooking Was the Thorn in the Welt-man's Happiness.

Samuel Weltman, of 127 Debevoise street, Brooklyn, is looking anxiously for his nine-months bride, who disappeared mysteriously from her home yesterday, after despoiling it of every furnishing. Even the husband's clothes are gone.

Where his wife went, or why, Weltman says he has no idea. His story may explain "why," however. Weltman is the senior partner of the firm of Weltman, Pollock & Co., makers of cloaks and suits at 20-22 Howard street. He is only twenty-five years old but decided last year that he was prosperous enough to afford the luxury of a wife. He courted Miss Amelia Laska, of 8 Attorney street, won her sweet "yes," and married her on Dec. 5.

Miss Laska brought Weltman a small dowry. For a time they were happy. Then Weltman's fears developed into facts.

His wife was not a good cook. Mrs. Weltman was not able to make even a faint success in the kitchen. All of Weltman's brothers and friends had married women who were kitchen marvels, and their domestic bliss, including dainty and toothsome tidbits for the table, galled Weltman.

Weltman suffered mentally when he and his wife dined with their friends, the difference between their homes and his being so marked in a ordinary way. He ventured to speak of his crushed hopes, but Mrs. Weltman's tears quieted him.

Then he began slipping out to restaurants when he was hungry, making only a pretense of eating at home. He could not afford a servant, he says.

Weltman's family, however, criticized his home affairs and won Mrs. Weltman's hatred.

Weltman fell ill a couple of weeks ago. The brothers, his wife cooked he could not take. He said nothing, but the wife knew what was the matter, he says. Then one of Weltman's brothers went to call on the sick man. Mrs. Weltman would not let him in the house. This caused more friction.

Last week Mrs. Weltman suggested that her husband get a divorce. The Jewish New Year and Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, when all differences must be settled one way or another, were approaching. Weltman agreed to separate and to divide the household possessions, including the wedding presents, and to return his wife's dowry.

Matters were unsettled when he left home early yesterday morning after the single cup of coffee he called breakfast. He ate breakfast in a Manhattan restaurant.

Returning at 11 o'clock last night, Weltman was surprised to find his home dark. He had no key and rang to be let in. No one answered.

The police of the 11th street station, where he went for help, refused to aid him, he says, but with the assistance of a lusty neighbor he broke in the front door. He found his home utterly stripped.

Carpets, furniture, pictures, clothing, silver, kitchen things and "even the doctored stepladder" were gone. No one in the neighborhood could tell him how or when the things had been moved.

Inquiry among all his friends has failed to give Weltman any trace of his wife.

HAVE YOU SEEN KATE?

She Was Hatless When Last Seen Two Weeks Ago.

Somewhere in Greater New York is a pretty young girl of fourteen years, and well dressed, who arrived here from Ridgefield, Conn., on Sept. 4 without a hat. Her light brown hair hung down over her shoulders when she was last seen by a companion, another young girl, who also came from Ridgefield.

Katharine Coffey is the hatless girl. She met twelve-year-old Sadie Kearns as the latter was on her way to the railroad station to visit relatives at 200 Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn.

Sadie says she left Katharine at the corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street on the afternoon of Sept. 4 and walked west toward Broadway.

Sadie went home to Ridgefield, telling her parents of her meeting Katharine and their journey to the city. Katharine's parents, who had searched everywhere for her, came to New York at once and went to see Chief Devoy, who referred them to the Brooklyn police.

Mr. Coffey thought his daughter might be hiding at Sadie's relatives, and the police inquired there to satisfy him. No one but Sadie knew anything of her.

Katharine is a good-looking girl, and when she left home wore a light slate-colored dress, white waist, with a lace collar, black stockings and lace russet shoes.

The police have sent out a general alarm for her.

FAKE TWINS' GREAT LARK.

Arthur Massey and "Tommy" McGrath, Two Incorrigibles.

Mrs. Mary Wilson was looking out of her window at 24 Irving place last night when she saw two very small and dirty boys walk up her steps and ring the bell.

"We ain't got no mother nor father," said one of the boys, sobbing, "and we ain't had nothing to eat for a long time."

"We're hungry! We're twins!" sobbed the other. Mrs. Wilson took them in, gave them a bath and a dainty supper. Then she put the rejuvenated "twins" to bed.

This morning Mrs. Wilson notified the Garry Society. Agents from Moore went
